Update: Here is evidence that Alan Watt did in fact steal Glen Kealey's work. Now play this video to see Alan caught lying.

For several months Alan Watt has been making threats against members of my forum, and on January 6th, he named me personally, and said he would be sending the cops after me. He has continually lied and distorted reality, and after recently having been exposed for plagiarizing the work of a man named Glen Kealey, he reaching into new depths of bizarre desperation, claiming that I am the leader of a mob that is threatening his life and that of his dog, and that the cops are coming for me. It is time I told my side of this story.

I have been a part of the Truth Movement for going on six years. I have spent an incredible amount of time listening to radio shows and reading websites, checking out all of the different "leaders" of the movement. Eventually, I began to feel as if all of these people were mixing fact with fiction and simply going around in circles, without getting to the real heart of the matter, or offering any type of solutions to the incredible problems our species is facing.

A couple years ago, I discovered Alan Watt. I found that he was delving much deeper into the true history and nature of this conspiracy than all of the rest of the industry moguls. He seemed to make things exciting again, referring me to books and areas of research that I had hitherto been unaware of. At that time he was not yet on RBN, and had the feel of a genuine truth teller, with a level of integrity uncommon in this business. I particularly enjoyed the old recordings of the shows he had done with Jackie Patru. He appeared to be going after the straight truth, without falling into the traps that the rest of the individuals discussing these subjects seem to inevitably get caught in. He presented himself as a rebel, living in the woods like a hermit on very modest means, simply trying to get the word out, to give humanity one last chance to save itself before it was to late. I believed it.

He seemed to be speaking directly to me, saying everything I had always known in my gut to be true. He said that this entire system that we call "civilization" is a scam, run by psychopathic elite occultists. He talked about the true nature of man, and that every aspect of it is exploited by this system in a scientific fashion.

When I decided to put a forum on my site, people who listened to Alan began to quickly gather at newly created Outlaw Forum to discuss the various subjects and ideas presented on Alan's show. It soon became clear that Alan was not happy about this at all. At first he made vague references to forums in general, discouraging people from visiting them at all, claiming that they were all run by government agents for the purpose of spreading disinformation. He slowly stepped up his attacks, narrowing in on Outlaw Forum, without ever naming it outright. These attacks soon became threats.

I can now see that Watt was, from the beginning, afraid that if listeners of his show were to get together and discuss his work, he would lose his control over them. They would begin to ask each other questions which Alan did not want asked, and eventually they would dig up his secrets and lies, and put them up for all the world to see.

Over the last few months, while attempting to stifle the free communication between his listeners, Alan has exposed his true self, and the little voice in the back of my head telling me that Alan was not what he claimed slowly began to rise in pitch. It was already screaming on the night of January 6th, when Alan Watt identified me by name on his RBN broadcast, and told me that the cops would be coming for me because I had dared to question his authenticity.

"I am Perfectly Genuine, I Assure You"

Certain things about Alan have always made me uncomfortable. For one, he is probably one of the most negative people I have ever been exposed to. He directly implies that everything is fake and evil, and he paints the picture that we have absolutely no chance of overcoming this horror that is upon us, and that there really isn't anything about humanity worth saving anyway. I understand that things are nearly as bad as he implies, at least in the Western World, but my personal belief is that we as humans exist for a reason, and that we are experiencing this evil for a reason. I believe there is meaning in our suffering, and meaning in the struggle to overcome evil. God or the Universe would not allow us to be born into such a situation as this, without giving us a shot at redemption. He always seemed to leave this bit out of his presentation.

Tying into this, he also totally avoided the subject of human spirituality. He would acknowledge that there is more to the universe than the physical, but claimed that all religions were created by the elite to control us, and that all other forms of spirituality were "New Age". Organized religion has certainly always been a control mechanism, and the New Age, with all of it's cults, channeling rituals and "quantum physics means you create your own reality" mumbo-jumbo is not any better, but this is hardly a reason for a person not to seek spiritual enlightenment. I cannot say for certain that it was his intent, but the longer I listened to his show, the more I felt as if the show would likely draw one away from his own quest for the spiritual realm, pushing them instead towards a state of hopelessness. I fear that Alan could likely have this effect on anyone who put too much weight on the man's projected impressions of the human experience.

It also appeared inconsistent that while supposedly encouraging people to be "free thinkers" and "individuals", he would simply not allow anyone to disagree with him, even if they attempted to do so politely. If a caller phoned into his show presenting a view of the world variant from his own, he was simply told he was wrong, if not lambasted and cut-off. It was basically, "you are free to think whatever I tell you to think".

I also always had the strange feeling that he was using some type of hypnotic technique, such as NLP, with the tone of his voice and the arrangement of his words. Though I could not ever really put my finger on it, I found the idea troubling.

“Your Love Won’t Pay My Bills”

By far the most contemptible aspect of his persona was his obsession with the copyright of his books. He would regularly launch into long rants about how people were giving away his .pdf files, playing the victim, crying about how hard his life is and how he has no money. On one show I can recall, he said 4 times that he could not afford an iPod. He would also beg shamelessly for donations, and use intense guilt tactics on anyone who was listening without paying their dues.

Why, I wondered, should a person claiming to be against the system of money be so obsessed with it? And why was he the only person in this movement not offering all of his material for free? His answer to the latter question was of course that everyone but him is a government funded propagandist.

I understand that we live in this system, and everyone needs money, but things are tough all over. I work 50 hours a week in a warehouse, and still cannot afford my own domicile. I spend whatever free time I have trying to aid the fight. Alan’s excuse for why he could not bring in some sort of income, like all of the rest of us do, outside of his work doing a one hour radio show three times a week, was absolutely ludicrous. He claimed it took all day to cook his meals and after doing the show from 7:00-8:00 pm, it took him until 3:00 am to upload the .mp3 file to his website. More recently he has said that he spends his entire day scouring the Internet for people who are violating his copyright.

Though this and several other doubts lingered in my mind, I was able to push it aside, as the information he was presenting was just so compelling.

“Keep This to Yourself, There are Spies Everywhere”

My first major clue as to Alan’s true nature came about 8 months ago when Alan stated several times that we should not talk to the people around us, because there are spies everywhere and we will be put in prison. This is totally ridiculous on a multitude of different levels. Yes, there may be “agents” who hang out in public places listen to people’s conversations; I doubt they are “everywhere”, as Alan claims, but for the sake of argument, let’s suppose they are. How would speaking in public make any difference at all? They already monitor everyone’s web usage, and have made lists of anyone who researches these subjects. We have nothing to lose anyway, as if we don’t stop this now, all of our lives are going to be a living hell, and most of us will probably end up dead.

There is absolutely no reason why we should not all be trying to wake up as many people as we possibly can before this thing comes down in full. Alex Jones even confronted him about this when Alan was a guest on his show, and Alan’s response was something like “people should not speak to others in their own area, but go to a different town where people don't know who you are and talk to people there". Whatever that means.

Upon hearing this, it hit me hard that Alan Watt was playing on paranoia in order to discourage truth seekers from exercising the one freedom we have left to do the one thing that may be able to save us; he was telling us not to attempt to wake others up.

Then the threats began.

"I'll Make You Regret This"

The first threat against a member of my forum came in the Fall of 2008, after a forum poster going by the handle "Neo" created a site called "sentientsentinel.com", in homage to Alan Watt, who's European site is at "alanwattsentientsentinel.eu". I told Neo that this was probably not a great idea, as the domain name was too similar to Watt's. To make sure that readers would not get confused into thinking that this site was an official site of Alan Watt, he put a statement across of the top of the page stating that fact.

On October 1st, Alan became aware of the webpage. Instead of contacting the admin of the site and voicing his concerns, as any mature adult would be prone to do, he opted instead to go on the air on his RBN broadcast attacking and threatening the site (.mp3 link here, the threats are at 1:30 - 4:00 into it, then from 5:50 - 8:00). He first claimed that it was created by government agents pretending to be him, to try and trick people and "lead them into forums". He mixed his attacks on Neo with attacks on people who are supposedly violating his copyright, saying that he has "friends all over", and would be "sending people to see [the people who have 'done the dirty' on him] and make them regret it".

This seems to have clearly been a thinly veiled threat of violence. One member of Outlaw Forum, who is an obsessive follower of Watt, said that this in no way implied violence, but he was unable to come up with any example of a possible alternate meaning. "Sending people to see you" is generally understood as a classic mafioso style threat of physical harm, and I find it impossible to believe Watt doesn't know this.

A couple days later, again talking both about "the one pretending to be him", along with unknown individuals who he claims are distributing .pdf files of his copyrighted material, he reiterated the threat of harassment by his "friends" who are "all over the world", saying "I will come down hard on you" (.mp3 link here, with the relevant statements at 1:50 - 5:00; transcript here). On the 6th of October he again attacks Neo's site, and refering to the link on that site to outlawjournalism.com, he says that the site is steering people into "antisemitism" (.mp3 link is here, attacks are at 1:40 - 3:40, transcript here). Also worthy of note, the week before, when talking about the violators of his copyright, he said he had satellite pictures of a man named Alphonso's home in Toledo, Ohio and that he better take the .pdf files down and send him money, or suffer some consequence (.mp3 link here, the threats are at 1:30 - 2:20).

The kicker is that he was implying that these people are government agents out to destroy him, and then threatening them. This is blatant double-speak. If they are government agents, why would he be threatening them?

You can make of this what you wish. It is within the realm of possibility that these "friends" he spoke of would do something other than beat up the accused, threaten their children, rape their wives, vandalize or burn down their homes, etc., though these are the images that immediately came to my mind upon hearing the threat. It is almost certain that whatever it was he was implying, these threats were a bluff, intended to intimidate the supposed offenders. If he was actually planning on sending thugs to someone's house, he would not say it over the air. Alan is many things, but he is not stupid.

Whatever his intent was, I think it would be extremely difficult to argue that administering any manner of threat like this over the air to anyone, let alone to a fan of yours who you have not even attempted to contact privately, is the behavior of a normal, decent human being. These actions are more akin to the that of a deranged control freak who, unable to deal with his own frustration, launches into childlike tantrums whenever someone does something he doesn't like. It is certainly not the behavior of a saint who would exile himself into obscurity, simply for the sake of trying to save humanity.

It was incredibly disillusioning to hear these threats from a man I had held in such high regard. Eventually, I swallowed my pride and admitted to myself that I had been duped. Alan was not the person of integrity that I had believed he was. Though he was presenting a different level of information than the rest of the "leaders", he was in fact more disreputable than even the most shameless of the entire rouge's gallery of profiteering conmen operating in this business.

The pieces began to fit into place in my mind. I realized he was not only not a hero, but in fact someone who likely had a diabolical agenda to push. Though I voiced my concerns about his threats on my forum, I did not state outright my rapidly intensifying suspicions about his real motives. I still held onto the hope that maybe he was just a frustrated old man who didn't have a full understanding of the nature of the Internet, and I didn't want to go public with my suspicions until I knew for sure.

Things only got worse.

"My Face is Copyrighted"

The next incident came when another of Alan's listeners, a regular poster at Outlaw Forum who goes by the handle "ColossusOfDestiny", created a domain called "alanwattfans.com". On this site he had links to Alan's podcasts, and was selling t-shirts and coffee mugs with Alan's face on them. He stated that he would be donating a portion of the proceeds of the sales to Alan Watt.

When he posted the link on the forum, I and the rest of the regular posters told him that this was a terrible idea, and that he could expect to be threatened on air. No more than 18 hours later, Alan went on his show and threatened to sue the creator of this site, claiming that his face was copyrighted (.mp3 is here, with the relevant statements and threats at 2:00 - 16:00). He again tied this in with the real or unreal people he claims are distributing his .pdf files. He claimed that one of the people who was distributing his copyrighted files was in trouble with the police, and the rest would soon be joining him. All of the nonsense he goes on about it presented in this particular self righteous, self-pityingrant, and one can clearly see the disgust he has for his own listeners. He also mentions Outlaw Forum, calling us psychopaths, and compares us to the Rothschilds and the Freemasons.

He once again called the person who created the site a government agent trying to destroy him, before threatening him.

I want to make it clear that selling the t-shirts and coffee mugs was a horrible idea, and I am not defending this. The fact is that it would be plain to anyone who came across that site that this was just a young guy, who was inspired by Alan's message, and was doing the best he could to spread the word.

Again, I know the man who made the site, and I know that just as with Neo, he would have taken it down immediately if Alan had simply emailed him and let him know he was uncomfortable with it. There was absolutely no reason, and no excuse, for more threats. It is the behavior of a spoiled child.

The fact that he responded so quickly was proof that he was now a regular lurker on Outlaw Forum. He was no doubt aware of the poor reception his "people are coming to get you" threats had received, and this time instead chose to threaten a lawsuit. The lawsuit was course a bluff, just as the apparent threats of violence were. If Alan does not have the money to fix his broken chainsaw, as he has claimed, he certainly doesn't have the tens of thousands of dollars it would take to launch an international Internet copyright infringement lawsuit.

At this point suspicions were mounting, not only on Outlaw Forum, but across the board. The events that followed caused all former followers of Watt who I have had contact with, save one religious devotee, to lose any remaining faith.

"Yes, I met Glen Kealey Once, Back in the 90's"

The final proverbial nail in Watt's coffin was quite fittingly bizarre in the extreme. On December 15th, "Warren in North Carolina" called into Watt's show and asked if he knew a man named Glen Kealey. Watt said he did, that he had met him in the 90's. The caller then told Watt that his material was clearly ripped off of Kealey's work, and was promptly cut off. When Alan posted the podcast of the show on his website, he removed the caller who had called in questioning him (here is the show in full from the RBN archives, call at 49:50, and here is the redacted version from Watt's site). Clearly, he did not want folks knowing about this Kealey person.

A member of Outlaw Forum noticed this strangeness, and we found Kealey's sites (here, here, and here) and email group. Lo and behold, it seems that the majority of Watt's "esoteric" knowledge has been directly lifted from this man's work. All of "Watt's" theories about the phonetic coding of language, the historical existence of genetic engineering, the hermaphroditic agenda, the troglodytes, etc., were directly taken from Kealey, without ever mentioning the man's name.

What's more, entire pages in Watt's heavily copyrighted .pdf files appear to have been photocopied strait from The Kealey Paper. Images and entire pages of text are identical. In case you are wondering, the copyright on Kealey's work is much older than the one on Watt's. I am certain that Alan would have declared to the caller that Kealey ripped him off, as he claims that David Icke did, if there was any way he could make that seem plausible.

I do not yet have copies of The Kealey Papers, but I would not be surprised if the entirety of Watt's three books was copied directly from them. One can go onto Kealey's webpage and see images from the covers of the Papers which Watt has used in his books (example at the head of this article), and if you read through some of Kealey's web posts, you can see clearly that Watt plagiarized his material extensively, giving him absolutely no credit. He even deleted the man's name from his show, denying him as Peter denied Christ.

At this point, after all of the shattered trust and broken pride, there was nothing else I could do but laugh. I laughed long and hard. The "copyrighted files", which I had spent hours listening to Watt cry his eyes out about, were in fact largely the work of someone else.

We discussed this extensively in a thread on Outlaw Forum. No one could deny it. It was just too blatant what Watt had done. We all knew what was coming next.

"They are Going to Kill Me and My Dog"

The Next round of threats came quickly, clearly in response to our discussion of Kealey. Here is the transcript of Watt's statements about the Outlaw Forum, made after he discovered that we were discussing his plagiarism (.mp3 link here, statements are at 5:10 - 8:20):

Hi folks, this is Alan Watt and we are cutting through the matrix, and I have been discussing how we have all been brainwashed. The general technique of brainwashing means that the people who have been subjected to it never know it. That is why it is very successful. And we live in a scientifically indoctrinated age. An age where literally the sciences were developed to do with groups and they talk about neuroscience which goes right into genetics by the way, and eugenics, and how we have all been studied; the studies are ongoing. Most of the studies today on people and the groups they will join are done on chatrooms. Many people in the chat rooms don't know they're part of the experiments. And they break them down into dyads, subtypes, personality types, and so on, and that's why it's so easy for someone who is put in as an agitator to get the mob going against someone else.

These are experiments, and I've had a few of these experiments pulled on me, over the years. Always from the same group, from one particular forum. I know every single one of them, and so do the police. Because lately I've had threats come from the same group again. This group even had the gall to put up a fake website with my name on it, at one point. And you turn to the first page, the first link took you off to someone, I know his real name; called Andrew, and it was an anti-Semitic rant. So that one was tried on me before.

And now the same character has got the mob all geared up to try and harass me. So I have to warn you, every single one of you, on the website; it is being monitored by the cops. Because you see malicious intent, and threats, are taken seriously. And I take threats against myself and my life and my dog very seriously. So let that be a warning to all of you. In your own states of locked up paranoia.

Now I hate to even go off in that direction but that is what you get when you start to get known. If you are not saying the things they want you to say, or you are not agreeing with their particular spin on something they'll come after you. Thats the mob. And most of them are just that as I say: they are the mob. They don't think. And they are easily riled up by someone who knows the techniques. For they are the fronts, they are disposable at the end of the day.

Following his strange method once more, he first claimed that I was some type of agent running some kind of social experiment with my forum, using psychological manipulation methods to rile people up against him, before introducing his most nonsensical threat that thus far.

In an attempt to switch the game up, he claims that we are the ones making the threats, citing this as the reason for his threats against us. This is called "blaming the victim". He says members of Outlaw Forum are threatening to kill him and his dog. He just makes that up, out of nowhere. He says he has contacted the police, and that he knows who everyone on the forum is, and we are all going to be dealt with by the authorities because we are making death threats.

He says that these threats are “coming from members of the forum”. I guess rather than saying that we are making threats on the forum, which would be easily disproved by anyone who cared to take a look, he is implying that members of the forum are contacting him privately, identifying themselves as being members of the forum, and then threatening to kill him and his dog. That is what he is saying. Imagine it: “I am a poster at Outlaw Forum and I am going to kill you and your dog”.

Let’s just suppose that it did happen, exactly like that; someone wrote him an email, identified himself as a member of my forum and then threatened to kill him and his dog. What does this have to do with me or my forum? Why would he not simply forward the email to the proper authorities, and allow them to trace it, and deal with the criminal individual accordingly? Why would there be a need to mention it publicly?

Suppose they had sent him an email saying “I have a membership at the YMCA and I am going to kill you and your dog”; would he then call the cops and insist that they monitor everyone holding a membership at the YMCA, and would the cops go along with this, and spy on all of us, as he is claiming they are doing to the members of Outlaw Forum?

But he certainly couldn’t have actually called the cops and said we were making death threats, without any proof, could he? And which “cops” would he call, I wonder, given that we are all living in different states and countries? Would he call all of our local police departments, since he knows who we all are? Maybe he would contact Homeland Security and Interpol? Or possibly the United Nations and NATO?

Or maybe, just maybe, this is another desperate attempt at intimidation from a psychopathic control freak about to totally lose control, physically overwhelmed by the idea that someone can question his lies, and he be able to do absolutely nothing to stop it.

The key here is that he is trying to make people afraid to visit the forum by saying that they will be in trouble with the police if they do. This is a truly pathetic act of total desperation. Every listener to Alan Watt should be deeply offended that this man believes you are stupid enough to believe this craziness he is selling you.

He says “I know his real name, it’s Andrew”, and Andrew is the name on my birth certificate (though I was only ever called it on the first day of school). His having gathered this “personal” information on me is also clearly meant to intimidate, and prove that he has the ability to find out everything about us, and “make us pay”. However, this is not terribly difficult to figure out, and certainly does not prove he has some magical ability to go to a forum and find the personal information of everyone posting there, as he is claiming. I have to say though, the man is creepy. He does have that going for him.

It is also worthy of note that he slanders me with the label of “anti-semite”, referring to an article I wrote as an “anti-semitic rant”. That article is here, for those interested. Apparently, he believes that “anti-semitism” is a real concept, and that anyone who questions the Jewish religion or the Secular State of Israel should be labeled as such.

He calls me a ringleader of a band of brainwashed followers, riling people up to “harass” him. He is apparently implying to his listeners that this is somehow related to the threats against him and his dog, but what he is actually talking about is me having encouraged people to call in to his show and ask him about Kealey. Ever since I made this suggestion on my forum, he has done shows without taking any calls, something I am not aware of him ever having done before. He has claimed that this is due to some technical problem, but one has to wonder how long he can keep that excuse going. He is going to have to deal with this situation in some way, and it will be interesting to see what he chooses to do.

He is backed up against a wall, because Kealey’s site is there for everyone to see, and once a person has seen it, they are not going to really be able to trust Watt ever again, especially given the measures he has taken to cover this whole thing up. It seems he is either going to have to go off the air, as he has been bluffing that he was going to in an attempt to increase his donations, or he is going to have to somehow attempt to address the issue of the plagiarism, by either admitting he was “influenced” by Kealey, or coming up with some sort of cover story, which could involve an elaborate fantasy tale about how Kealey is somehow working for the government as a part of some sort of complex plot to try and destroy him.

Whichever path he chooses, I assure you, these threats are going to keep on coming. Given the fact that he is clearly dredging the depths of total desperation, he may actually try to have me harassed in some way, and is almost certainly already trying to get my site shut down. If my site does happen to go down, or if I turn up missing (I seriously doubt the latter will occur, but given the apparent nature of this man, I have to at least mention the possibility), you will all know what has taken place.

After all of this, there is absolutely no way a person could honestly claim that Alan Watt is simply in this fight to try and help people. His behavior demonstrates that he has a severe personality disorder, which most assuredly prevents him from caring about anything other than himself.

Psychopathy is the only explanation for his behavior, as it would have been most beneficial for him to simply ignore Outlaw Forum altogether. He was unable to do so, due to his ego and the overwhelming need a psychopath has to control everything around him. If he had never begun with the threats, I and the rest of his now former listeners would likely still have respect for him, he would still be able to spread his defeatist message without being questioned, still be able to make a killing off of paypal donations.

He blew the scam himself by being unable to control his own psychopathic instincts. People were able to break away from him and see him for what he truly was, overcoming his lies, only because he was incapable of restraining his own evil nature. I believe that this is analogous of the situation the entire world finds itself in. Eventually, the very nature of the system in which we live will be it's downfall.

We will never know for sure if Alan is some type of government propagandist, giving out extremely large doses of truth tainted with disinformation, confusion and paralyzing hopelessness, or simply a snake oil salesman, making easy money exploiting the vulnerability of people looking for truth in a world of lies. If he is the former, it seems that he is required by his controllers to earn his own keep while working this scam, in order that his ties to the establishment cannot be directly traced. This would explain his obsession with money and copyrights.

I want to state clearly that I have no definitive evidence that Alan is working for anyone, but I personally believe that it is the only logical explanation one could come to given his behavior. If he was simply out for money, he is intelligent enough he could be making a lot more in a lot of different ways.

I hope that this account helps those fans of Alan Watt, many of which were probably confused by his recent behavior, to put things together, and begin to snap out of the haze he has lolled you into. We will each have to break the spell that the "leaders" of this movement have cast on us if we wish stand a real chance at changing the future. We simply cannot afford to let ourselves be diverted by men with agendas that we do not even fully understand. Alan Watt is the final gatekeeper. If we can steer past him, we are in the clear, capable of deciding our own path.

Watt wants us to feel impotent and helpless. The people in power are not infallible, and they are not gods. We, those of us with the intelligence to figure this system out, and the willpower to oppose it, are the most powerful force on the planet. Our biggest threat is not the global banking cartel or the United Nations, but the shill "leaders" in our movement who serve to neutralize us. Free of the psychological and emotional chains they impose upon us, we are unstoppable. God is on our side, and it is we who shall inherit the Earth.

We must tell ourselves everyday that all is not lost. We must cling to the humanity we still have left, and the hope for a world where people can just be people. Yes, civilization is evil, but we are here for a reason, and that is what we should all be searching for. We each have the ability to change the world, simply by the choices we make. The future is still wide open. We are spiritual beings experiencing a physical form, and the battle of the spirit is still one that each of us can win, and together, we can still save the world.

Awwwww, you who censors anything against your way of thinking on your forum are po'd at Watt? How laughable. You and your pals trying to make money off of Watts time consuming search into many a truths. Go see if your University Professors with all their lies will even tell you their lies for free? ???? Get a Grip Guy. You're just upset, Watt had the balls to you call you's out. Why shouldn't he be paid for his talent> What talent do you have? Arguing with your members and censoring their posts? Anyone who's spent time on your forum sees you for who you really are. It's a good thing he doesn't take calls from time wasting dweebs such as yourself, trying to pass yourself off as oh so sweet and innocent. Puuuuleeeeze. You are no match for Watt. Watt hit the nail right on the head. Deal with it.

I think you have me confused with someone else. I don't have a forum right now. I used to have a small private forum with only a handful of members. I don't disagree with what Watt has put front. The majority of the information is fact, although the only presumable problems I see is his cynical misconception of the world around him, and the recent news of his plagiarized books.
